History and Notes:	Man calling because he found an old bottle of Roundup Ready to Use Advanced formula with hand pump, probably 1 year old. About an hour ago, the trigger clogged and he accidentally got sprayed in both eyes with the Roundup, the right eye more than the left eye. He wiped his right eye with the back of his hand. He flushed with cold water for about 3 minutes. No pain currently, the right eye may be a little red. MRPC discussed the product toxicity. MRPC advised proper ocular irrigation. On follow-up, the man stated he feels like there is an eyelash in his right eye. Eyes are a little red, no pain or burning, no watering noted. He reflushed his eye with warm water about 30 minutes ago. The left eye is 99% better. Continuing to observe since last flushing was recent. On further follow-up, the man states he still feels like an eyelash is in his right eye. MRPC referred man to eye MD or urgent care for evaluation and possible treatment. The man went to an urgent care and was diagnosed with scratching his cornea. He was given drops to use.
